Numb. 804

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28. 1738. No 810.

By the Author of the DAILY GAZETTEER.

SIR,

R. D'Anvers has frequently oblig'd the World with Diſcourſes in Behalf of the Liberty of the Preſs; laſt Saturday he gave us a freſh one, and has promiſ'd us more. The Occaſion of this Renewal of his Zeal he declares to be an Apprehenſion raiſed in him by ſome Writings in the Gazetteer; and this Declaration to be ſure was very proper and ſeaſonable, ſince without it there is no Man living who would not have concluded that his Apprehenſions had their Foundation in his own Writings. Indeed Mankind is ſo throughly poſſeſs'd with this Notion, that Mr. D'Anvers muſt pardon them if they cannot on a ſudden diveſt themſelves of it, and reſign their Belief to his bare Aſſertion; eſpecially too as it is attended with ſo confus'd and diſtemper'd a Compliment as he makes to your Correſpondents, in calling us contemptible Wretches; and then ſuppoſing us to be not only let in, but hired in to the Secrets of State, that we may make no Secret of them, but blab them abroad, and forewarn all Oppoſers to render them abortive. But be his Motive what it will, I am very well pleas'd with its Effect, and rejoice that ſo good a Cauſe is fallen into ſuch able Hands: For tho' I have been always as zealous for the Liberty of the Preſs as he, yet, I confeſs, I do not very diſtinctly comprehend what is meant by it. All the Acquaintance I converſe with, I find too in the ſame Caſe; and ſo far as Mr. D'Anvers has yet gone in the Argument, he has rather more perplex'd our Underſtandings than enlighten'd them. Taking all his Lucubrations and laying them together, he appears to have handled this Point ambiguouſly, and (to uſe a favourite Expreſſion of his) more Miniſterially than the Proſpect he has at preſent ſeems to intitle him to do. He has been very copious in declaring for the Liberty of the Preſs, and has given ſome Reaſons for it; but at other Times he has not ſcrupled to admit, that there may be ſuch Books printed as the Authors may juſtly and rightfully be puniſhed for: Nor do I remember that he has ever ſaid, that the Law which makes it High Treaſon to print againſt the King's Title ought to be repealed; yet again he has declaim'd in ſuch general Terms againſt Proſecutions for Printing, that the Sum and Subſtance of all his Doctrine comes to be only this, That a Man may print what he will, provided he do not print what he ought not; but if he does print what he ought not, he ſhould be puniſhed without being proſecuted. A woeful State of Liberty this! and yet it is what Mr. D'Anvers's Reaſonings leave the Preſs in hitherto. I doubt not but to ſee it extricated in future Papers, and our Notion of the Liberty of the Preſs made clear and intelligible; for I will be far from ſurmiſing that he has any ſecret Reſerves here, any Views to a convenient Latitude in future good Times, or any latent Adulations to ſome that are paſt. I dare ſay, he abhors all Communication with any of thoſe bad Miniſters, who in a former Reign adviſed the Recommendations from the Throne to the Parliament for reſtraining the Preſs, and two Bills to be brought in thereupon. Therefore undoubtedly he will unravel all theſe Intricacies, and explain preciſely what the Liberty of the Preſs conſiſts in. Yet let me tell him, this will require his utmoſt Care and Attention; for the Step is ſlippery, and a greater Man than any that has writ in the Forty Years he mentions, has not got over it ſo cleanly as one could wiſh. I mean Mr. MILTON, who in his Areopagetica, diſplays with the utmoſt Force of Wit and Argument, the Miſchiefs and Abſurdity of having Licenſers of the Preſs; yet, on the other Hand, has this remarkable Paſſage, 'I deny not but that it is of greateſt 'Concernment in the Church and Commonwealth, 'to have a vigilant Eye how Books demean themſelves as well as Men; and thereafter to confine, 'impriſon, and do ſharpeſt Juſtice on them as Male-'factors.' And in another Place, ſpeaking of the Times before the Invention of Licenſing, he ſays, 'No envious Juno ſate croſs-leg'd over the Nativity 'of any Man's intellectual Offſpring; but if it 'prov'd a Monſter, who denies but that it was juſtly 'burnt or ſunk into the Sea.' By all which, if he has taken away Licenſing, he has placed in the room of it ſomething that will have the ſame Effect upon the Publick, by depriving them of Inſtruction, and a worſe upon Authors, for whom it would be better to be prevented printing, than to have their Works ſeiz'd and deſtroy'd when they have been at the Charge of the Preſs. In ſhort, he has only chang'd Licenſers for printing into Licenſers for publiſhing; and, whoever theſe laſt may be, the ſame Objections lie againſt them as againſt the former, or rather greater. Milton could not but ſee this, and therefore his Acknowledgment then, and Mr. D'Anvers's ſince, That there may be ſome Books which deſerve to be burnt or drown'd, ſeems to have been drawn from them by the irreſiſtible Force of Truth, in ſpight of the Contradiction it carries to the reſt of their Doctrine. Whether, after this, ſome Perſons may be appointed to judge of the Deſerts of Books, or whether if there be a Judge, there may be a Proſecutor, I ſhall not take upon me to diſcuſs; but leave it to the maſterly Hands of Mr D'Anvers who has enter'd on the Subject, and in three or four Papers more, it is expected, will clear it from all Doubts and Difficulties, with his uſual Impartiality and Perſpicuity.

To the Growers and Manufacturers of Wool, and Exporters of the Woollen Manufactures of Great Britain.

GENTLEMEN,

THE Exportation of Wool from Great Britain and Ireland into foreign Countries, has been of late Years univerſally acknowledged to be ſo deſtructive of the Trade and Commerce of this Nation, that it would be almoſt ridiculous in this Place, to inſiſt particularly upon the Proof of it. But tho' the pernicious Effects of this Practice are ſufficiently felt, yet few hitherto have contributed their Endeavours either to alienate the preſent Evils, or to prevent thoſe that muſt inevitably enſue from it.

The Publick has already been frequently inform'd of the numerous Hardſhips under which the Manufacturers, facturers, and consequently the greatest Part of this Nation, groan and labour at this very Instant: What then must become of the Poor, who by the present low Price of their Labour, are hardly able to support their own single Persons, much less a Family of three, four, or five Children, which we all know to be too often the Case. Hence it is, that the Poor of this Nation are become so very numerous, in every manufacturing Town, that it is impossible for the Land Owners to bear the Burthen of this Support for any considerable Time longer.

If we look back to the Years when the Plague last rag'd at Marseilles, it will appear evident, that the Manufacturers of Great Britain, were not only able to Manufacture all the Wool of this Kingdom, but also all that which Ireland could spare; and tho' the Price of Wool was then above one third higher then at present, and the Price of Labour much greater, yet it is well known, that the Wool then manufactured, did not exceed our foreign Demands for it; and that the industrious Labourer was then able to provide a sufficient Maintenance for himself his and Family, without the Assistance of the Parish, as the Case is at present.

In order therefore to redress these Grievances, and to recover this most valuable Branch of the British Trade, its agreed and resolved upon by a considerable Number of the Manufacturers of Suffolk, Norfolk, and other Counties, to form a Committee at London, in order to consider of a Scheme intended to be laid, this Sessions of Parliament, before the Honourable House of Commons.

Gentlemen,

As this is an Affair of the utmost Importance not only to this Nation in general, but also to every Manufacturer in particular, it is to be hop'd that all Merchants, Factors, and others, concerned in any Branch of the Woollen Manufacture, will contribute their utmost Endeavours towards promoting so great and laudable an Attempt: The Decay of this Branch of our Trade, calls loudly for the most powerful Assistance, as the Possession of all the Mines of Mexico and Peru, will hardly be able to compensate the Loss of it; those Nations who have lately been able to rival us in it, know well the Advantages of it, and carefully improve them; and should not we be equally diligent in preserving of it, as it is ours by all the Ties of Nature and Nations.

Those who have any thing to propose in Relation to the Woollen Manufacture, are earnestly desired to communicate the same by Letters Post paid, to Mr. Thomas Gainsborough of Sudbury, in the County of Suffolk; Mr. John Dennis in Aldersgate-street, London; Alderman Caudle of Thetford, in the County of Norfolk; Mr. John Skinner, and Mr. John Dickens, of Spalding in Lincolnshire; and Mr. Richard Smith, of Oundle in Northamptonshire.
